

APPEAL NO. 24-3278
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

CHRISTIAN HEAPS,
Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

DELAWARE VALLEY REGIONAL HIGH SCHOOL BOARD OF EDUCATION;
SCOTT MCKINNEY, individually and in his official capacity as Superintendent of Schools; ASHLEY MIRANDA, individually and in her official capacity as school counselor; ANGELICA ALLEN-MCMILLAN, in her official capacity as Acting Commissioner of the New Jersey Department of Education; JOHN ROES 1-10, said names being fictitious, individually and in their official capacities; MATTHEW J.
PLATKIN, in his official capacity as Attorney General of New Jersey, Defendants-Appellees.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey
Case No. 3:24-cv-00107

BRIEF OF CHILD & PARENTAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF APPELLANT AND FOR REVERSAL

MARY E. MCALISTER (Counsel of Record)
VERNADETTE R. BROYLES
CHILD & PARENTAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN, INC.
5425 Peachtree Pkwy. # 110
Norcross, GA 30092
770.448.4525
mmcalister@childparentrights.org
vbroyles@childparentrights.org
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

CORPORATE DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Amicus Curiae Child & Parental Rights Campaign (“CPRC”) is a nonprofit organization, does not have a parent corporation, and does not issue stock. CPRC is not aware of any publicly owned corporation, not a party to the appeal, with a financial interest in the outcome of this case.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Corporate Disclosure Statement.....	i
Table of Authorities.....	iii
IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
LEGAL ARGUMENT	4
A. The district court’s decision exemplifies how Monell has been used to create de facto sovereign immunity for municipalities.....	4
B. Plaintiffs’ efforts to hold municipalities accountable are further hampered by lower courts’ misapplication of plausibility pleading standards to Monell claims.	7
C. District courts impermissibly utilize a de facto heightened pleading standard for Monell claims.....	11
D. District courts deny plaintiffs the latitude required to obtain the facts necessary to meet their heightened plausibility and pleading standards.	15
E. Courts’ application of Monell to deny plaintiffs the opportunity to challenge constitutional violations renders Section 1983 effectively meaningless.....	18
CONCLUSION	20
CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE WITH TYPE-VOLUME LIMIT, TYPEFACE REQUIREMENTS, AND TYPE-STYLE REQUIREMENT.....	22
CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE.....	23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Ashcroft v. Iqbal , 556 U.S. 662 (2009)	2, 8, 16, 17
Bell Atlantic v. Twombly , 550 U.S. 544 (2007).....	2, 8
Blair v. Appomattox County School District , Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 24-1682	1
Board of the County Commissioners v. Brown , 520 U.S. 397 (1997)	19
City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik , 485 U.S. 112 (1988).....	5
Conley v. Gibson , 355 U.S. 41 (1957)	12
Foote v. Ludlow School Committee , First Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 23-1069.....	1
Haley v. City of Boston , 657 F.3d 39 (1st Cir. 2011)	9, 10
In re Tower Air, Inc. , 416 F.3d 229, (3d Cir.2005	14
Jett v. Dallas Indep. Sch. Dist. , 491 U.S. 701 (1989).....	5
Keahey v. Bethel Township , No. 11-cv-07210 (E.D. Pa. June 10, 2014),	10
Landerer v. Dover Area School District , MD of PA Case No. 1:24-cv-00566.....	1
Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit , 507 U.S. 163 (1993)	12-14
Littlejohn v. Leon County School Board , Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 23-10385	2
Monell v. Department of Social Servs. , 436 U.S. 658 (1978)	2, 5, 13
Monroe v. Pape , 365 U.S. 167 (1961)	13
Mount Healthy City School District Board of Education v. Doyle , 429 U.S. 274 (1977)	4
Owen v. City of Independence , 445 U.S. 622 (1980)	4, 13

Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469 (1986) 6

Thomas v. Indep. Twp., 463 F.3d 285 (3d Cir. 2006) 14

Willey v. Sweetwater County School District #1,
Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 25-8027. 2

Other Authorities

David Jacks Achtenberg, Taking History Seriously: Municipal Liability Under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 And The Debate Over Respondeat Superior, 73 FORDHAM L.R. 2183 (2005) 5

Fred Smith, Local Sovereign Immunity,
116 COLUMBIA L. REV. 409 (2016) 3-5. 7

Joanna C. Schwartz, Municipal Immunity,
109 VIRGINIA L. REV. 1181 (2023)..... 8, 9, 11, 18, 19, 20

Peter H. Schuck, Municipal Liability Under Section 1983: Some Lessons from Tort Law and Organization Theory, 77 GEO. L.J. 1753 (1989). 19, 20

Rules

FED R. CIV. P. 8(a)(2)..... 12

FED. R. CIV. P. 9(b) 12

IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE¹

Child & Parental Rights Campaign (CPRC) is a nonprofit, public-interest law firm that represents parents like Plaintiff across the country in challenging school district actions that threaten parental rights, including, as is true of the district here, policies that intentionally withhold vital information from parents regarding their children's upbringing and well-being. CPRC represents parents challenging school districts that have concealed from parents that their children are being treated as something other than their biological sex at school, including the use of alternate names and pronouns, and permitted use of opposite sex privacy facilities. See, e.g., Blair v. Appomattox County School District, Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 24-1682; Foote v. Ludlow School Committee, First Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 23-1069; Landerer v. Dover Area School District, MD of PA Case No. 1:24-cv-00566; Littlejohn v. Leon County School Board, Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 23-10385; Perez v. Broskie, MD FL Case No. 3:22-cv-

¹ No counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no person other than amicus and its counsel made any monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. Counsel was timely notified of this brief as required by Fed. R. App. P. 29, and all parties consented to its filing.

83, and Willey v. Sweetwater County School District #1, Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals Case No. 25-8027.

In these cases, CPRC has faced challenges to pleadings nearly identical to those faced by Plaintiff here. CPRC has observed a disturbing trend in district courts applying the standards for municipal liability described in Monell v. Department of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658 (1978), and the pleading standards of Bell Atlantic v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544 (2007) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662 (2009), to create an impenetrable labyrinth for plaintiffs seeking to use 42 U.S.C. §1983 to vindicate their constitutional rights. Parents such as Plaintiff here encounter secret school district policies that deprive them of their fundamental parental rights. When they discover the secret policies and bring a Section 1983 claim for the violation of their rights, they are told that they cannot proceed because they have not provided sufficient factual details to state a plausible claim. As these policies are being enacted and/or implemented purposely withholding information from parents, parents cannot provide factual details that are in the possession of Defendants without discovery, and cannot engage in discovery unless they survive the motion to dismiss. Parents are thus left with no remedy for the violation of their constitutional rights, undermining the raison d'etre for Section 1983.²

CPRC respectfully submits this amicus curiae brief detailing the impossible dilemma plaintiffs like Mr. Heaps face when trying to use Section 1983 for its intended purpose. District courts have misinterpreted Monell to create the very de facto sovereign immunity for municipalities that Monell rejected. Courts have erected virtually unscalable obstacles in the form of plausibility standards exceeding the requirements of Iqbal and impermissible heightened pleading standards. Finally, district courts make it impossible for plaintiffs to remedy the purported pleading insufficiencies by refusing to grant plaintiffs the appropriate latitude to obtain the information before shutting the courthouse doors in their faces.

Parents like Mr. Heaps should not be denied the opportunity to vindicate their constitutional rights under the vehicle provided by Congress. CPRC respectfully requests that this Court reverse the district court's order.

² See Fred Smith, Local Sovereign Immunity, 116 COLUMBIA L. REV. 409, 464 (2016) (citing Rep. Samuel Shellabarger, the author of Section 1983).

LEGAL ARGUMENT

A. The district court’s decision exemplifies how Monell has been used to create de facto sovereign immunity for municipalities.

“[A] municipality has no ‘discretion’ to violate the Federal Constitution.” Owen v. City of Independence, 445 U.S. 622, 649 (1980). Those words penned by Justice Brennan in rejecting sovereign immunity for local government entities under Section 1983 ring hollow in decisions such as the district court’s here, which reflect a de facto adoption of local sovereign immunity.³

In Owen, the Supreme Court determined that passage of Section 1983 abrogated common law immunity for municipalities. “By including municipalities within the class of ‘persons’ subject to liability for violations of the Federal Constitution and laws, Congress...abolished whatever vestige of the State’s sovereign immunity the municipality possessed.” 445 U.S. at 647-48. The Owen decision followed Mount Healthy City School District Board of Education v. Doyle, in which the Court said, “the record before us indicates that a local school board such as petitioner is more like a county or city than it is like an arm of the ³ Id. at 416.

State. We, therefore, hold that it was not entitled to assert any Eleventh Amendment immunity from suit in the federal courts.” 429 U.S. 274, 280–81 (1977). Despite the Court’s rejection of municipal immunity, “cities [and school districts] are nonetheless generally protected from federal constitutional suits due to subsequent cases interpreting and applying Monell v. Department of Social Services.”⁴ “As a functional matter, the municipal causation requirement [imposed by Monell] and the individual immunities that local officers receive [qualified immunity] render specific classes of governmental defendants insusceptible to suit, even when there is a determination that a government’s agent has violated constitutional rights.”⁵

That de facto municipal immunity has developed as the result of Monell’s requirement that plaintiffs must prove that a local government’s policy or custom caused a constitutional violation, 436 U.S. at 690, and subsequent cases narrowly interpreting “policy” and “policymakers.”⁶

⁴ Id. at 430.

⁵ Id. at 416.

⁶ Id. at 413-14. See also, David Jacks Achtenberg, Taking History Seriously: Municipal Liability Under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 And The Debate Over Respondeat Superior, 73 FORDHAM L.R. 2183, 2190-91 (2005), citing Jett v. Dallas Indep. Sch. Dist., 491 U.S. 701 (1989) and City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112, 130 (1988).

The municipal causation requirement, as it has evolved over time, has proven fatal to litigants seeking justice for civil rights violations. It has been more than 30 years since the Supreme Court found a municipal policy unconstitutional.⁷ Equally restrictive rulings from lower courts, such as the ruling here, mean that local governments are often “inoculated from accountability, including for conduct that would render them liable for violations of state law.”⁸ When individual defendants are granted qualified immunity, the causation requirement often leaves those whose constitutional rights have been violated with “no defendant to sue at all.”⁹

Regularly leaving plaintiffs without this remedy undermines representative government. Apposite are the words of Representative Samuel Shellabarger, the author of § 1983, who shepherded the provision through the House of Representatives: “This act is remedial, and in aid of the preservation of human liberty and human rights. All statutes and constitutional provisions authorizing such statutes are liberally and beneficently construed. It would be most strange and, in civilized law, monstrous were this not the rule of interpretation.” Cong. Globe, 42d Cong., 1st Sess. 68 app. (1871). The frequency with which plaintiffs are left without remedy for constitutional violations raises questions about whether this legislative promise is adequately fulfilled today.¹⁰

⁷ Smith, supra n. 2 at 414, citing Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 485 (1986).

⁸ Id. at 414-15.

⁹ Id.

Congress enacted Section 1983 to, inter alia, provide a remedy for violations of federal law where such remedies “though adequate in theory, [were] not available in practice.”¹¹ Inoculating municipalities from suit and leaving plaintiffs without remedy for violation of their constitutional rights, as is true here if the district court’s order is not reversed, renders Section 1983 virtually meaningless as a vehicle for vindication of civil rights violations.

B. Plaintiffs’ efforts to hold municipalities accountable are further hampered by lower courts’ misapplication of plausibility pleading standards to Monell claims.

As well as having to overcome de facto municipal immunity, Plaintiffs seeking to hold school districts liable for constitutional violations must also satisfy district courts’ interpretations of the Twombly and Iqbal pleading standards. Application of those standards makes it “particularly challenging for plaintiffs to survive motions to dismiss; in many cases, plaintiffs cannot find the type of evidence that would support their Monell claims without formal discovery.”¹² In Twombly, the Supreme Court ruled that plaintiffs must allege a “plausible” entitlement to relief in their complaint to withstand a motion to dismiss. 550 U.S. at 545. Two years later, in Iqbal, the Court clarified that a “plausible” complaint is one filled with factual allegations—legal conclusions will not suffice. 556 U.S. at 678. The circumstances in Iqbal foreshadowed the difficulties the ruling would create for plaintiffs like Mr. Heaps. The Supreme Court dismissed Iqbal’s claim against the attorney general and FBI director because Iqbal could not prove that the defendants had intentionally promulgated a discriminatory policy to detain Arab and/or Muslim men. Id. at 683. As one scholar noted, “it was near impossible for Iqbal to have evidence of Ashcroft and Mueller’s intent before discovery—indeed, that is the very type of evidence that can only possibly be unearthed during discovery.”¹³

¹⁰ Id. at 464.

¹¹ Id. at 474-75.

Plaintiffs like Mr. Heaps pleading a Monell claim after Iqbal often face the same Catch-22 dilemma. A plaintiff might have access to enough facts to survive Monell if he is challenging a policy as unconstitutional on its face or questioning obvious misconduct by a final policymaker.¹⁴ However, if a plaintiff is alleging that there is a secretive unwritten policy, custom, or failure to train, facts necessary to support the claim, e.g., proof of past misconduct, training records, or investigation files, may only be available through discovery.¹⁵ In that case, unless the trial court acknowledges the problem and permits at least preliminary discovery, the plaintiff will be foreclosed from bringing his claim against the municipality.¹⁶ This, perversely, only encourages more secrecy and withholding of information from citizens by public officials.

¹² Joanna C. Schwartz, Municipal Immunity, 109 VIRGINIA L. REV., 1181, 1187 (October 2023)

¹³ Id. at 1215.

Circuit Courts of Appeal have acknowledged the challenges facing plaintiffs trying to state a claim for municipal liability under Monell at the pleading stage in light of the plausibility standards of Twombly and Iqbal. In Haley v. City of Boston, the city argued that the plaintiff's allegations of a police department policy of withholding evidence from criminal defendants and failure to train staff that the policy was unconstitutional failed to meet the plausibility standards. 657 F.3d 39, 52 (1st Cir. 2011). The First Circuit disagreed, saying that the argument

¹⁴ Id.

¹⁵ Id.

¹⁶ Id.

“elevates hope over reason.” Id. Citing Iqbal’s statement that “evaluating the plausibility of a pleaded scenario is a ‘context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense,’” the Court found that “the municipal liability claims pleaded by Haley step past the line of possibility into the realm of plausibility.” Id. at 53. “Although couched in general terms, Haley’s allegations contain sufficient factual content to survive a motion to dismiss and open a window for pretrial discovery.” Id.

Some district courts have similarly recognized that the challenges facing plaintiffs trying to plead municipal liability mean that motions to dismiss are premature.

For example, a judge in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania denied defendant’s motion to dismiss plaintiff’s failure-to-train claim, observing that, in order to prevail on that claim, the plaintiff would need to “prove that the Township had a pattern of engaging in constitutional violations such as those present in this case” and that the plaintiff needed “a sufficient period of discovery to adduce this evidence.” The court, therefore, concluded that the motion to dismiss was premature.¹⁷

¹⁷ Id. at 1215, citing Keahey v. Bethel Township, No. 11-cv-07210 (E.D. Pa. June 10, 2014), Memorandum at 14, Dkt. No. 7.

However, as one professor's study showed, the vast majority of motions to dismiss municipal liability claims are granted,¹⁸ demonstrating the challenge faced by plaintiffs trying to assert a claim of municipal liability for civil rights violations.

As discussed in Part I, the difficulties of proving Monell claims compromise the remedial compensation and deterrence goals of Section 1983 and mean that victims of clear constitutional abuses may be left empty-handed, unable to recover under Section 1983—even if their constitutional rights have been violated.¹⁹ And municipal officials remain unaccountable. That is the situation faced by Mr. Heaps unless this Court reverses the district court's order.

C. District courts impermissibly utilize a de facto heightened pleading standard for Monell claims.

Further complicating parents' efforts to vindicate their fundamental rights, district courts employ a de facto heightened pleading standard that was specifically rejected by the Supreme Court in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination

¹⁸ Id. at 1208, describing research showing 83 percent of motions were granted in whole or in part, or were undecided.

¹⁹ Id. at 1227.

Unit, 507 U.S. 163 (1993). In Leatherman, the Supreme Court overturned a Fifth Circuit decision that applied the principle that in cases against government officials, plaintiffs had to state the basis for their claims with factual detail and particularity. Id. at 167. The Court said, “it is impossible to square the ‘heightened pleading standard’ applied by the Fifth Circuit in this case with the liberal system of ‘notice pleading’ set up by the Federal Rules.” Id. at 168.

FED R. CIV. P. 8(a)(2) requires only “a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief,” and the Supreme Court has interpreted it strictly. “The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim. To the contrary, all the Rules require is ‘a short and plain statement of the claim’ that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff’s claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.” Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47 (1957). FED. R. CIV. P. 9(b) provides a particularity pleading requirement only for “averments of fraud or mistake,” in which “the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity.” Thus, the Federal Rules do not prescribe particularity in pleading for complaints alleging municipal liability under § 1983. “Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.” Leatherman, 507 U.S. at 168. “Perhaps if Rules 8 and 9 were rewritten today, claims against municipalities under §1983 might be subjected to the added specificity requirement of Rule 9(b). But that is a result which must be obtained by the process of amending the Federal Rules, and not by judicial interpretation.” Id. “In the absence of such an amendment, federal courts and litigants must rely on summary judgment and control of discovery to weed out unmeritorious claims sooner rather than later.” Id. at 168-69.

Imposing a particularity pleading requirement on claims for municipal liability “wrongly equates freedom from liability with immunity from suit.” Id. at 166. Monell affirmed that a municipality cannot be held liable under § 1983 on a respondeat superior theory. 436 U.S. at 691. However, the Court did not grant municipalities immunity. To the contrary, Monell overruled Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167 (1961), which provided that local governments were wholly immune from suit under Section 1983. In Owen, the Court rejected a claim that municipalities should be afforded qualified immunity, like that afforded individual officials, based on the good faith of their agents. 445 U.S. at 650. “These decisions make it quite clear that, unlike various government officials, municipalities do not enjoy immunity from suit—either absolute or qualified—under § 1983. In short, a municipality can be sued under § 1983, but it cannot be held liable unless a municipal policy or custom caused the constitutional injury. Leatherman, 507 U.S. at 166.

To successfully plead such a policy or custom, a plaintiff need not provide detailed factual allegations as required under Rule 9, but a “short and plain statement of the claim that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff’s claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.” Thomas v. Indep. Twp., 463 F.3d 285, 295 (3d Cir. 2006) (citing Leatherman, 507 U.S. at 168). In Thomas, this Court rejected individual defendants’ arguments that the plaintiffs’ civil rights complaint should be dismissed for an absence of detailed factual allegations. Id. The Thomas court reiterated that a plaintiff “need only make out a claim upon which relief can be granted.” Id. Supporting facts certainly should be alleged, “but only those necessary to provide the defendant fair notice of the plaintiff’s claim and the ‘grounds upon which it rests.’” Id. at 295-296 (citing In re Tower Air, Inc., 416 F.3d 229, 237 (3d Cir.2005)). Should more facts be necessary to define the disputed facts and issues, “other procedural mechanisms, such as discovery, are available.” Id. “[A] plaintiff will not be thrown out of court on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion for lack of detailed facts.” Id. at 295.

Neither should Mr. Heaps have been thrown out of court for lack of more detailed allegations. He has alleged specific, non-conclusory facts that more than satisfy the notice pleading standards of Rule 8 in the context of Leatherman and Iqbal. The allegations pushed the complaint over the threshold necessary to survive a motion to dismiss. By dismissing the case, the district court foreclosed Mr. Heaps from conducting full discovery to obtain the information required for him to redress the violation of his constitutional rights. Other parents challenging secretive school policies have faced similar outcomes.

D. District courts deny plaintiffs the latitude required to obtain the facts necessary to meet their heightened plausibility and pleading standards.

A final barrier to pleading a Section 1983 claim erected by district courts is denying plaintiffs appropriate latitude to obtain facts necessary to state a claim when the critical information regarding the genesis and implementation of the parent non-notification policy is in the hands of defendants and recoverable only through discovery. Such latitude is necessary for a proper analysis of the plausibility of parents' claims in light of the case-specific nature of the evaluation. As the Supreme Court observed in Iqbal, “[d]etermining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will...be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense.” 556 U.S. at 672. A context-specific evaluation requires reviewing, inter alia, the relationship between the parties, their relative access to essential information, and the nature of the claims asserted. When, as is true here, critical information is necessarily in the hands of an institutional defendant and not accessible to, or specifically withheld from, an individual plaintiff without legal process, the plaintiff should have greater latitude in meeting the Iqbal plausibility standard.

Mr. Heaps cannot be expected to have historical and contextual information about a school district policy. Only school district staff would have information regarding the genesis and implementation of the policy. That information critical to analyzing the policy would not be accessible to Mr. Heaps except through the full complement of discovery. The pleading rules have tightened since Twombly and Iqbal, but courts continue to acknowledge that plaintiffs should be accorded latitude where information needed to fill in knowledge gaps is in the control of the defendants. In such circumstances, the “interests of justice” may warrant remand for discovery to fill in the informational gaps.

Mr. Heaps’ allegations regarding the school policy that inserts school officials between parents and their children are sufficient to permit Mr. Heaps’ Section 1983 challenge to proceed. The district court’s order exceeds the requirements of Rule 8.

Courts have repeatedly affirmed that detailed factual allegations are not necessary to survive a motion to dismiss even after Iqbal. The appropriate test is whether the facts contained in the complaint show that elements such as causation are “plausible.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. When critical facts to complete the plausibility analysis are available only to the defendants and are obtainable only through discovery, the interests of justice require giving the plaintiff the latitude to acquire the information. The district court’s failure to accord Mr. Heaps that latitude was a reversible error.

E. Courts' application of Monell to deny plaintiffs the opportunity to challenge constitutional violations renders Section 1983 effectively meaningless.

Section 1983 was enacted more than 150 years ago as a means to compensate people, like Mr. Heaps, whose constitutional rights have been violated and to deter future misconduct. “Monell doctrine in its current form undermines both of these values.”²⁰ Plaintiffs who seek recovery under Section 1983 from a municipal entity and individual actors face a two-pronged attack, i.e., a claim of qualified immunity by the individuals and, because of the jurisprudence that has developed under Monell, de facto municipal immunity by the institution. A decision in defendants’ favor on both grounds leaves the party whose constitutional rights have been violated with no recourse. In addition, state actors who escape both individual and municipal liability are not deterred from continuing to violate constitutional rights. Other state actors are not only not deterred but are actually emboldened by the realization that a Section 1983 claim will likely be dismissed. “Monell doctrine is unsettled; multiple open questions lead courts to apply widely varying standards, even in the same circuit, which likely encourages defendants to file more motions and creates greater uncertainties for plaintiffs evaluating the costs and benefits of pursuing a Monell claim.”²¹

²⁰ Schwartz, supra n.12, at 1189.

The unsettled nature of the Monell doctrine is reflected in intra-Court disagreements on the Supreme Court. “On at least ten occasions during the decade after Monell, the Court struggled to define the kinds of circumstances, relationships, and patterns of authority determinative of whether a municipality is liable for the misconduct of its employees.”²² Emblematic of the disagreement is Justice Breyer’s dissent, joined by Justices Ginsburg and Stevens, calling for a re-examination of Monell in Board of the County Commissioners v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 430–31 (1997). “Essentially, the history on which Monell relied consists almost exclusively of the fact that the Congress that enacted § 1983 rejected an amendment (called the Sherman amendment) that would have made municipalities vicariously liable for the marauding acts of private citizens.” Id. at 432 (emphasis in original). That fact “does not argue against vicarious liability for the act of municipal employees particularly since municipalities, at the time, were vicariously liable for many of the acts of their employees.” Id. (emphasis in original). “Monell’s basic effort to distinguish between vicarious liability and liability derived from ‘policy or custom’ has produced a body of law that is neither readily understandable nor easy to apply.” Id. at 433.²³ “Today’s case provides a good example,” id., as does Mr. Heaps’ case.

²¹ Id. at 1188.

²² Id. at 1193, quoting Peter H. Schuck, Municipal Liability Under Section 1983: Some Lessons from Tort Law and Organization Theory, 77 GEO. L.J. 1753, 1753 (1989).

“By imposing an ‘official policy’ requirement, the Court has bound itself to a doctrine whose principal consequence is to deny citizens recoveries against local governments for damage caused by officials’ constitutional violations.”²⁴ That is evident in Mr. Heaps’ case and in other cases involving secrets concerning their children’s well-being being kept from parents throughout the country. It is also antithetical to the protections offered to the public against rogue state actors in Section 1983 since 1871.

CONCLUSION

This Court should not sanction the continuing misuse of Monell to deny plaintiffs their rights under Section 1983 as occurred in this case.

²³ Justice Souter echoed Justice Breyer’s call for re-examination in a separate dissent. 520 U.S. at 430.

²⁴ Id. at 1200, quoting Schuck, 77 GEO. L.J., at 1755.

It should overrule the lower court's decision and permit Mr. Heaps to proceed with his claim.

Dated: July 7, 2025

/s/Mary E. McAlister

MARY E. MCALISTER (COUNSEL OF RECORD)

VERNADETTE R. BROYLES

CHILD & PARENTAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN, INC.

5425 Peachtree Pkwy. # 110

Norcross, GA 30092

770.448.4525

mmcalister@childparentrights.org

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE WITH TYPE-VOLUME LIMIT, TYPEFACE REQUIREMENTS, AND TYPE-STYLE REQUIREMENT

This brief complies with the word-count limitation of Fed. R. App. P. 29(a)(5) because, according to the word-count feature of the program used to prepare it and excluding the items listed in Fed. R. App. P. 32(f), it contains 4,038 words.

This amicus brief also complies with the typeface requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(5) and the type-style requirements of Fed. R. App. P. 32(a)(6) because this brief has been prepared in a proportionally spaced typeface using Microsoft Word 365 in 14-point Century Schoolbook font.

/s/ Mary E. McAlister
MARY E. MCALISTER

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on July 7, 2025, I electronically filed the foregoing brief with the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit by using the CM/ECF system. I certify that counsel for all parties in this case are registered CM/ECF users and that service will be accomplished by the CM/ECF system.

/s/ Mary E. McAlister

MARY E. MCALISTER